But after twelve years of faithful service the old building was again to be deserted. In 1845 St. Paul's church was completed, and the large majority of the Monumental congregation moved over and occupied it. The Monumental church being thus made for the most part vacant, the Pineapple people came up and united with those that remained there. The old temple was again desolate. One Sunday night the sexton locked it up, and for eighteen years it was occupied by nothing but mournful associations and tender memories; there were plenty of them in gallery, and pulpit, and pew. No responses were heard, but when at night the horse's hoof had ceased to grind upon the pavement stone the passer-by could hear the time-worn corners and weather-beaten roof and solemn spire responding to a litany of midnight storm. O, the recollections that flood the soul in old churches! Do we not all know of venerated pews, where we could sit for hours to-night and think, and think, and think? Well, to go on, in 1853 this irrepressible church started up again; Rev. Mr. Carmichael took charge. He remained a year, and was succeeded by Rev. Mr. Webb. Again a good beginning was made-congregations were assembled, salary paid, baptisms, confirmations, marriages, funeralsa regular church life. But one night in April, 1856, clang! clang! went the firebells; a great arm of flame entwined about the old steeple, and soon all was a black ruin. Here endeth the third life. Goodbye Old Pineapple! The next chapter is from H. W. Tyler, and Lizzie Smith, for equally brief. After another trance of two stealing twenty-eight cents from William The brigades advanced bravely across the years, Rev. R. Two years later they sold the old lot and built a new gothic church in a better location. Every one who is familiar with this work will support me in saying that from that day to the present this band of brothers have labored with a wisdom and a zeal which is a bright example to the laymen of Virginia or any other diocese. The Condition of the Bridges .- The canal-bridge, which was swept off last Sunday at noon and captured below the city was taken to pieces and brought up by Mr. A. C. Jones. A good force is engaged in replacing and repairing it, and it is expected that it will be ready for use to-day.

The first span of Mayo's bridge was not carried away, as was generally supposed; it is, however, greatly injured. The piers on which that portion of the bridge rested which was carried away are in bad condition, and will need considerable repairing.

The iron-work of the spans which were not swept off is twisted into all manner of shapes, and a considerable amount of work will be required to place the bridge back in its original condition. The paper-mill bridge will be replaced by the time that it is needed. The bridge over the canal in front of the sumac mills has been repaired. and is ready for use. This bridge was not carried off, but was badly damaged.
